City finds fewer issues over move-in weekend

Boston. Inspectors reached out to residents moving in throughout city neighborhoods during the massive event.

This year's Allston Christmas move-in extravaganza plopped plenty of personal effects on city streets over the weekend, but Boston officials said they were still pleased with how streamlined the event was compared to previous years.

"The overall process has been a lot better," said Inspectional Services Department Commissioner William Christopher. "[Movers] ran into the usual problems — waiting for their keys, traffic problems and such — but the feeling this year was very good. We were out talking to parents and sending the message, 'We're here to help you.' It softens the blow to some of these people moving in."

A new initiative brought 50 inspectors from various city departments to canvas Boston neighborhoods in an effort to sniff out housing violations.

As of Monday afternoon, the Inspectional Services Department had issued 120 violations and 21 $300 tickets for unsafe and unsanitary units.

Inspectors also issued 1,100 code enforcement tickets, picked up 190 tons of trash or recycling and posted 120 bed bug notices.

Though the move-in rush hadn't quite come to an end as of press time, those numbers were well below the amount of citations issued last year.

Officials handed out more than 2,000 citations during 2013's move-in weekend, which was less than half the amount given in 2012. The city has attributed the year-over-year improvements to its effort cracking down on landlords in student neighborhoods.

Another difference that stood out this year, Christopher noted, was more move-in activity in South Boston.

Two of the most concerning problems during move-in weekend are smoke detector violations and leaky pipes, Christopher said, though traffic is always a problem.

"The police department redirected streets this year," said Christopher. "Traffic is usually the nightmare. This year, it wasn't a pleasure, but it wasn't a full nightmare."

Cambridge. Student injured after fall from MIT fraternity building window

A female student was rushed to the hospital late Sunday night after falling from a window at a Massachusetts Institute of Technology fraternity, emergency officials said Monday.

The student, who was not identified and is not affiliated with MIT, fell from the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house on Bay State Road around 11:30 p.m., MIT spokeswoman Kimberly Allen told The Boston Globe.

It was not immediately clear how far she fell, or what led up to the incident.

She was taken to Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, according to Boston Public Health Commission spokeswoman McKenzie Ridings. The extent of her injuries was not clear.

MIT officials are investigating the incident. GLOBE

NICOLAS CZARNECKI, METRO

Market Basket employees returning to work after a summer-long strike were bolstered on Labor Day by the humbled gratitude of their newly reinstated CEO Arthur T. Demoulas.

"It was very heartfelt and it was also very nerve-racking to see all these people put their livelihoods on the line," Demoulas said outside of the Chelsea Market Basket early Monday. "It touched my heart and I will be forever grateful."

Demoulas was ousted as the company's CEO in June, prompting company-wide picketing. On Wednesday, Demoulas struck a $1.5 billion deal to take over the company, ushering in employees who had walked off the job in support of him.

The first order of business, Demoulas said, is to "say thank you millions of times over" to his loyal employees and customers.

The CEO is known for fostering a sense of camaraderie among his staff, earning their trust and loyalty. When asked on Monday how he manages to stay in touch with so many of his 25,000 employees, Demoulas pointed to the company's philosophy of hands-on management.

"We try to be good to one another and help each other out," Demoulas said. "We certainly saw that in the past six or seven weeks."

The chain intends to open three new stores by the end of the year. Revere will be the first.

Ready to grow up? 'Society' can help

Brookline. Move-in day is just another daunting task adults must face.

A new Brookline business that is set to open its doors in October has a comforting message to adults faced with unpleasant grown-up tasks: "Don't panic."

Over the next few weeks, The Society of Grownups will move into its new location at 1653 Beacon St., where its members will get schooled on how to handle their finances and other tidbits on tackling adulthood's many annoyances.

To help spread the word, company representatives volunteered to help neighbors moving into buildings near its office on Monday.

"We understand that grownups are facing different challenges, and moving is only one of them. We ourselves are moving into the neighborhood in October," said Society of Grownups Director Nondini Naqui, 34. "Our new neighbors were grateful to see us walking around offering moving boxes, water and a helping hand."

The company is reluctant to release many details about what prospective clients can expect, but according to Naqui, the concept of the company has piqued plenty of interest.

"We've been met with a lot of people who are curious about us," said Naqui. "It will be a place in the community where we can facilitate the conversation around money and do it in an engaging and different way that hasn't been done before."

Apple teaming up with Visa, MasterCard on iPhone wallet

Secure. Apple will make paying with your phone easier and safer with its fingerprint reader.

Apple Inc. plans to turn its next iPhone into a mobile wallet through a partnership with major payment networks, banks and retailers, according to a person familiar with the situation.

The agreement includes Visa Inc., MasterCard Inc. and American Express Co. and will be unveiled on Sept. 9 along with the next iPhone, said the person, who asked not to be identified.

The new iPhone will make mobile payment easier by including a near-field communication chip for the first time, the person said. That advancement, along with Touch ID, a fingerprint recognition reader that debuted on the most recent iPhone, will allow consumers to securely pay for items in a store with the touch of a finger.

While companies such as Google have invested in creating ways for phones to make payments in a physical store, U.S. retailers have been slow to adopt the technology, thus limiting the use by shoppers, according to Ben Bajarin, an analyst for Creative Strategies LLC in San Jose, California. That could change with Apple entering the market because iPhones have the largest market share in the U.S., he said.

Detained Americans in N. Korea seek help in CNN interviews

Three U.S. citizens detained in North Korea spoke to CNN on Monday, with one pleading with the United States for help and another describing his situation as "urgent."

Kenneth Bae, who was arrested 18 months ago and sentenced to 15 years hard labor for attempting to bring down the state, told CNN he was working eight hours a day, six days a week, and was the only inmate at a prison camp staffed by more than 20 officials, including a doctor.

"I ask the U.S. government and people out there to really put in effort to send somebody, to make it work," he added.

In the past, U.S. citizens held in North Korea have been freed after visits from former presidents Jimmy Carter and Bill Clinton.

Tourists Matthew Miller and Jeffrey Fowle, who were arrested this year, told CNN they were being treated well as they awaited imminent trial. REUTERS

How to get rich off your great idea

President Obama hosted Maker Faire this summer to hear inventors' smart ideas. / GETTY IMAGES

Money. Napoleon Hill has some tips.

We've all had moments where we're pretty sure we've just thought up the perfect million-dollar business idea. But most of us never take action, so our dreams remain just that. "Think Rich and Grow Rich," by Napoleon Hill, is one of the best-selling books of all time, and Hill has devoted his career to teaching others how to be successful. The author is about to release a new starter kit to help readers find financial success.

What makes the kit better than the many "get rich quick" books out there is that it's a workbook with actionable steps that can be personalized to each reader. Every chapter is a new step toward securing your riches. For example, one of the chapters requires readers to list people to contact who can help further their ideas. Another chapter focuses on how to sustain faith in your idea, even when it doesn't seem to be going anywhere. There is also a lengthy chapter on planning, to ensure follow-through on your goal-making.

With more than 50 exercises and 13 steps, reading "Think Rich and Grow Rich" is not a passive experience. It takes time and commitment — but if you are serious about making money, it could be worth the price of $29.95. (However, if you're looking to secure your fortune through investing and not inventing, this might not be the best book for you.)

While making money is definitely the focus of the starter kit, there is more emphasis than you might expect on personal fulfillment and happiness that comes outside of being financially successful. Most finance books don't delve too much into a bigger "meaning of life" theme, but Hill makes a point of reminding readers that money cannot provide true happiness, and there are motivational quotes throughout the book with this in mind.

The kit

Creepy hackers release creepy naked celeb photos for the Internet's creeps

It's been a while since there was a celebrity nude photo leak, so some industrious and not-at-all-creepy hackers got together to unleash one doozy of a Labor Day Weekend photo dump, posting images allegedly of more than 100 stars including Kate Upton, Kirsten Dunst, Ariana Grande and Jennifer Lawrence. The images, reportedly culled from iCloud accounts, were initially posted to that bastion of online decency, 4Chan, before going wide on Twitter. Lawrence, for her part, isn't taking this lying down. "The authorities have been contacted and will prosecute anyone who posts the stolen photos of Jennifer Lawrence," her publicist says in a statement.

Some of the hacking victims, such as Grande, singer Victoria Justice and Olympic gymnast McKayla Maroney, were quick to dismiss the risque images as fakes, but others confirmed their legitimacy. "To those of you looking at photos I took with my husband years ago in the privacy of our home, hope you feel great about yourselves," Mary Elizabeth Winstead tweeted. "Knowing those photos were deleted long ago, I can only imagine the creepy effort that went into this. Feeling for everyone who got hacked."

ARIANA GRANDE WANTS TO "BREAK FREE" FROM ALL THIS HACKING DRAMA.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

When a celebrity's private photos are leaked online, it's easy to jump to the conclusion that they only have themselves to blame, since they took the photo in the first place, but that's a terrible way to look at things. The idea of "don't take nude photos of yourself if you don't want them online" both unnecessarily shames the victim of an actual crime — hacking and theft of personal property — and seems to give a pass to the actual criminals in question by leaving the hacker out of the question altogether. Remember, Christopher Chaney was sentenced in 2012 to 10 years in prison for stealing and posting photos of Scarlett Johansson. Ms. Johansson, of course, committed no crime by photographing herself. It's just a shame that so many people need to be reminded of that.

List

Hacked

The names of more than 100 famous actresses, musicians and athletes were included in a list of purported hacking victims, nude photos of whom circulated online this weekend after a massive image dump. There was one male member on the list, though — sort of — as the final entry on the posting mentioned, "a shot of Alison Brie and Dave Franco." Some of the other big names on the list include (for more go to Metro.us):

- Rihanna
- Lea Michele
- Selena Gomez
- Lizzy Caplan
- Kim Kardashian
- Mary-Kate Olsen
- Aubrey Plaza
- Jenny McCarthy
- Krysten Ritter
- Vanessa Hudgens
- Brie Larson
- Jessica Brown Findlay
- Yvonne Strahovski
- Hilary Duff
- Wynona Ryder

Analysis

How to better protect yourself

We spoke with Rik Ferguson, vice president of Security Research at Trend Micro, an information security firm, about how the hack might have taken place and what people can do to make their online data safe.

"The celebrities' accounts could have been targeted in several different ways," says Ferguson. "But the most likely scenario is this one: The hacker already knew the victim's email address for using iCloud, clicked the 'I forgot my password' link, a standard 'security question', like their mother's maiden name, popped up and the hacker answered it."

These answers aren't hard to find when it comes to people whose every personal detail is scrutinized. "The trouble for celebrities is that much of their personal information is not so secret," says Ferguson. "The attacker could have also accessed their iCloud via their webmail account, which was perhaps easier to hack."

ANTHONY JOHNSTON, MWN

Kirsten Dunst

Opinion

Gervais blames the victims

Ricky Gervais was among those quick to admonish victims of the latest hacking scandal, tweeting: "Celebrities, make it harder for hackers to get nude pics of you from your computer by not putting nude pics of yourself on your computer." The almost immediate backlash to the tweet prompted Gervais to delete it and go on a campaign of clearing up his opinions on the matter.

GERVAIS

Lena Dunham, on the other hand, took a more serious tone. "The 'don't take naked pics if you don't want them online' argument is the 'she was wearing a short skirt' of the web. Ugh," she posted.

Talking points

Brangelina literally want an island for themselves

Following their surprise nuptials, Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt have taken their brood to Gozo, a small island near Malta, for a working honeymoon to film scenes for their new film, "By the Sea," while they celebrate their union — and no one else is invited. "A lot of people have agreed to leave the island so they can have privacy to film the movie," a source tells Page Six, adding that the couple has already paid as much as $200,000 to local business owners to convince them to take a little vacation of their own.

The newlyweds are taking privacy to a new, wealthy extreme.

Spears back with controversial ex?

In the wake of her split last week from boyfriend David Lucado, Britney Spears is reportedly reaching out to some questionable old contacts. Sources tell Radar Online that despite intense supervision from her father, Spears has been secretly texting controversial ex-boyfriend Adnan Ghalib. Spears and Ghalib dated in 2008 before she was placed under a conservatorship. In 2009, her minders obtained a three-year restraining order against Ghalib. "[Her dad] monitors Britney's cell phone, but she found a way to secretly text Adnan," a source says. "They never really stopped talking."

Nev Schulman shares the catfish tricks to keep an eye out for in his new book, "In Real Life." / ALYSSA LAVINE

Nev Schulman: Your 'In Real Life' love guru

"Catfish" host Nev Schulman wants you to know that it's not them — it's you. In his new book, "In Real Life: Love, Lies & Identity in the Digital Age" (out today), Schulman explains that the key to establishing a long-lasting bond is to take a look inward. Yes, it also helps to know how to use Google's reverse image search. And you should know that a Facebook account with only 12 friends is a red flag. But Schulman says there's way more to it than that. We asked him to share his best words of wisdom for both online and offline dating.

The "Catfish" host has a new book about putting your best self forward — both online and off.

Be aware of your soft spots

"It's not what to look out for in other people. It's what to look out for in yourself. ... Getting catfished isn't about someone being a really good liar or Internet user. It's about being vulnerable and perhaps unsatisfied or insecure, and somebody taking advantage of that."

Don't fake it

"We all have doubts, fears and insecurities in our happiness. When you hide that from other people, you're also kind of hiding it from yourself. If everybody goes around pretending to be the happy, fulfilled version of themselves and ignores the truth about things they're feeling, then we're all participating in the same game of not really connecting in a meaningful way or being open and honest with each other."

Real relationships take work

"I think we all sort of subscribe to this fairy tale version of how love conquers all and how once you find your soulmate everything falls into place. That's just crazy. It doesn't work like that. I think we've become disillusioned that we will find the perfect person now that we have online dating and then it won't take any work and compromise — but it does, no matter what."

If you're looking for love online, meet as soon as possible

Money. 'Guardians': Your new box office overlords

The "Guardians of the Galaxy" misfits reached a new box office stratosphere over Labor Day Weekend, soaring past fellow Marvel hero "Captain America" to become the highest-grossing domestic movie of 2014.

"Guardians" rang up $22.2 million in U.S. and Canadian ticket sales from Friday through Monday, topping weekend charts for the third time since its Aug. 1 debut, according to estimates from tracking firm Rentrak. Total domestic sales climbed to $280.5 million, surpassing the $259.8 million earned by April release, "Captain America: The Winter Soldier."

Giant robot sequel "Transformers: Age of Extinction," which had a June 27 opening, reigns as the year's top-grossing film worldwide with more than $1 billion in sales, including a domestic haul of $244.3 million, according to BoxOfficeMojo.com

Elsewhere, "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" took the No. 2 slot, collecting $15.7 million at North American theaters through Sunday.

Pierce Brosnan: Back in action

PIERCE BROSNAN RETURNS TO THE ACTION GENRE WITH "THE NOVEMBER MAN." GETTY IMAGES

Interview. The last James Bond was happy to return to blowing stuff up in "The November Man."

Speaking about his new action-thriller "The November Man," Pierce Brosnan is more than eager to talk about the challenges of playing a very different kind of spy. The Irish actor is not only the star, he's also the executive producer of the film — and he was determined to make sure his work as rogue ex-CIA man Peter Deveraux was grittier, grimmer and very different from his past outings in the cloak-and-dagger field.

Made by hand

Real old school

In an age of computer-generated marvels, is it nice to take part in an action film that's about real car chases, real explosions, real effects?
Well, it worked for us. ... We knew we weren't going to have this monolithic graphic overture of CGI or anything like that. It's a handmade, hand-wrought film, and everything's in-camera. And that was the pleasure of it — to be in the streets, to make a movie that was tangible and real and to be blowing stuff up in the streets.

You've been doing comedies lately, including 'The Love Punch' and 'A Long Way Down.' What convinced you to make a return to the action and spy genres?
It just seemed like fertile ground — if not now, when? I had my days as James Bond, and they were glorious and wonderful and productive. We brought [Bond] back after six dormant years ... so it was invigorating to be a part of it. Then when the curtain fell — surprisingly and unexpectedly, while I was looking the other way, it was just over. And I had a certain void, a vacuum. So when we set sail in developing "The November Man," it just seemed to hit now with the geopolitical happenings going on.

You talk about your earlier work in the espionage genre, but there was never a scene in your older films where Mr. Bond, like Deveraux does in this film, mortally wounds an innocent girl so he can delay his enemies and better make his getaway. Was that scene important to establish Deveraux as that dangerous, that driven?
Well, it's a shocking act, on paper and on screen. It's one that, really, you roll the dice on and you hope that you don't disconnect with your audience. But I think that the story, by that stage, you already know that anything can happen — and it does in the most graphic way. I love that scene. I think it's something that defines the character, that keeps the audience off-center.

If he's so rich, why's he a columnist?

Re: 'Column is no place for opinions' (Metro, Aug. 28-Sept. 1) Thank you to letter writer Adam Thompson for calling out columnist Tim Sykes. I'm glad I'm not the only one tired of Sykes' distortions and repetitive "vacation shaming" of the president. I'm so sick of this phony "millionaire" who for some reason has to pen a column for Metro and run a get-rich-quick website to make ends meet.

Ferguson needs judgment

A question to those advising we not "rush to judgment" about the death of Michael Brown: Exactly how does anyone expect Officer Darren Wilson to be found "guilty" of anything? In the weeks since the shooting, the Ferguson PD has interviewed none of the numerous witnesses who were there, hasn't reviewed any of the abundance of photographic evidence, didn't even file an incident report on the shooting itself nor respond when Brown's autopsy confirmed he was shot in the back from a long range by police-issued weapons. Rather, they've spent that time either intimidating the peaceful protesters, unlawfully detaining journalists and basically acting like an occupying army.

Garoppolo has rated high for a while now

NFL. The Patriots are not exactly new members of the "Jimmy Garoppolo is awesome" club.

Five years from now, Jimmy Garoppolo may be viewed as Tom Brady II and people will look back on the 2014 NFL Draft the same way they currently look back on the 2000 NFL Draft. "The Patriots did it again!" they'll say.

But it's important to note now — before we get too far removed from the 2014 selection process — that the Pats targeted Garoppolo early, and the Brady selection was more dumb luck than anything.

Garoppolo was 62nd out of 256 players taken in the 2014 draft while Brady was 199th out of 254 players taken 14 years ago.

Despite coming out of tiny Eastern Illinois, Garoppolo was well thought of heading into draft season late last winter. In fact, in a Sporting News story from February, Garoppolo was ranked the third best quarterback of the 2014 draft, ahead of both Johnny Manziel (picked 22nd overall by Cleveland) and Derek Carr (picked 36th overall by Oakland). Here's the Sporting News' glowing take on Garoppolo from seven months ago:

Dropping the Mallett

The Patriots traded Ryan Mallett to the Texans on Sunday and received a 2016 conditional seventh round pick in return.

- The pick could change to a sixth round pick if Mallett takes a certain number of snap counts in Houston.
- Mallett is unlikely to start Week 1 for the Texans as former Titans and Bills QB Ryan Fitzpatrick is expected to get the nod. The Texans also drafted a quarterback in the 2014 NFL Draft — Pitt's Tom Savage in the fourth round.

RYAN MALLETT WILL NOW BE FIGHTING FOR A JOB IN HOUSTON. GETTY IMAGES

"Possessing a remarkably quick release and ample arm strength, Jimmy Garoppolo, once he quickly identifies an open receiver, is able to deliver the ball faster than any quarterback in this class. … His mental capacity and arm talent should keep him from escaping the Top 100 picks and he could go as high as the early second round."

The two quarterbacks that were ranked ahead of Garoppolo at the time — Teddy Bridgewater and Blake Bortles — were both knocked right out of the gate in their respective, pre-draft summaries. On Bridgewater: "Teddy Bridgewater doesn't have elite arm strength." On Bortles: "Blake Bortles' lack of development is what's keeping him from being a worthwhile first-round pick."

It's clear that Garoppolo had been high on the list of many scouts and "NFL people" prior to the Patriots' somewhat surprising selection of him in May. Looking back on that praise should give New England fans even more faith that Bill Belichick made the right move Sunday by jettisoning backup quarterback Ryan Mallett to the Texans.

Now, it remains to be seen if Garoppolo is good enough to be the man that finally takes over for Brady when No. 12 can't get the job done anymore. But not since Drew Bledsoe has there been someone second in command who will garner more attention than Garoppolo. At this point, it's safe to say that attention follows him.

NFL power rankings | by Matt Burke

No. 1

Seahawks (13-3)

(*2013 record)

No team has gone back-to-back since the 2003-04 Patriots, but as of right now who is to say the Seahawks can't repeat? We know what the defense can do, but the offense might just be getting warmed up. Pete Carroll has a stable of running backs he's ready to unleash as Christine Michael, Seattle's third stringer, would be a starter for about half the teams in this league.

No. 2

Broncos (13-3)

The Broncos learned the hard way that simply having a great offense doesn't guarantee you jack. Aqib Talib, T.J. Ward and DeMarcus Ware should help matters on "D."

No. 3

Patriots (12-4)

Bill Belichick would snort for several minutes if you accused him of being a copycat. But in adding Darrelle Revis and Brandon Browner, it's clear he liked what Seattle did in 2013.

No. 4

49ers (12-4)

Their previously outstanding "D" isn't slated to be as dominant this season with NaVorro Bowman and Glenn Dorsey on the shelf. Then there's the case of Aldon Smith.

No. 5

Packers (8-7-1)

The Broncos' scoring records from last season might not stand 365 days. The Packers' "O" just may be that good with a healthy Aaron Rodgers and Eddie Lacy ready to explode.

No. 6

Saints (11-5)

The Saints also recognized this past spring that titles aren't won without some semblance of balance. They grabbed one of the top defensive players on the market this off-season in safety Jairus Byrd.

No. 7

Eagles (10-6)

The excitement surrounding Chip Kelly's innovative offense was thought to have peaked after last year's opening win over Washington. The joy isn't expected to subside at all this season.

No. 8

Falcons (4-12)

It's hard to recall a team having more "bounce-back" year buzz than the Falcons do right now, and no, it's not just us drinking the Liev Schreiber "Hard Knocks" Kool-Aid.

No. 9

Cardinals (10-6)

The best team to not make the playoffs in 2013, many were saying that if they were in the AFC they would have at least made the title game. The NFC is shaping up to be just as brutal in 2014.

No. 10

Bengals (11-5)

NBC put up a graphic last week that shows that Andy Dalton's numbers are virtually identical to Peyton Manning's through their first three years. Maybe that contract wasn't ridiculous.

No. 11

Ravens (8-8)

In addition to the Falcons and the Texans, here's another big "bounce-back" year candidate. Can new offensive coordinator Gary Kubiak get Joe Flacco back to form?

No. 12

Colts (11-5)

Much was made about how the Colts beat the Seahawks and Broncos last year. But those two wins came in the early portion of their 2013 season. They should now focus on peaking late.

No. 13

Bears (8-8)

Jay Cutler is getting some "sleeper" buzz as a top fantasy QB. The offense seems to be in good hands under Marc Trestman, but on defense the question is, "Does Jared Allen have anything left?"

No. 14

Chargers (9-7)

The Chargers have quietly re-tooled pretty well. They gave the Broncos some issues in that divisional playoff game last year. Can Keenan Allen and Co. take the next step?

No. 15

Steelers (8-8)

Ben Roethlisberger's contract comes up plenty when discussing the Steelers. He would do himself a favor by having a monster year, and he has the weapons to do so in Antonio Brown and Markus Wheaton.

No. 16

Lions (7-9)

The NFC North. It ain't your daddy's black and blue division. The Packers, Bears, Vikings and Lions should all have dynamic offenses this season.

No. 17

Jets (8-8)

Expect the Geno Smith jokes to subside. There's optimism there. The problem may be the schedule. After Oakland in Week 1, they play six straight projected playoff teams.

No. 18

Giants (7-9)

The offense should be improved. It might not be as good as rookie wide receiver Odell Beckham projects, but it's hard to believe Eli Manning has back-to-back horrid seasons.

No. 19

Panthers (12-4)

People are freaking out over the receiving options for Cam Newton but it's not as if Brandon LaFell and a 34-year-old Steve Smith were the second comings of Rice and Taylor last year.

No. 20

Texans (2-14)

At a cookout last week, several knowledgeable sports fans were all wondering aloud who the Texans' starting QB was. After five minutes of Googling we landed on Ryan Fitzpatrick.

No. 21

Redskins (3-13)

Cam Newton and the Panthers turned it around last year. Are RGIII, entering his third season, and the Redskins this year's version of Cam and the Panthers? For what it's worth, Washington went 3-1 in the pre-season.
